LOCAL GOVERNMENT IN ENGLAND AND WALES

A Guide to the New System

LONDON
HER MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE
1974

This handbook contains basic information about the new local government system which came into operation on 1 April 1974.

Although intended primarily for those professional and business people who have dealings with local authorities, it is hoped that the handbook will be of general interest.

I. GENERAL OUTLINE OF THE NEW SYSTEM

1. The reorganisation of local government which came into full operation on 1 April 1974 is designed to give the country an up-to-date system of local authorities each with the resources to carry out all the tasks which the community expects of its locally elected councils.
2. The arrangements inherited from the 19th Century had a number of acknowledged weaknesses when measured against modern needs. There were too many authorities and many of them were too small in size and resources. The mixed system of counties and county boroughs meant that big towns were often separated administratively from their surrounding hinterland. Many boundaries were outdated and areas no longer reflected the pattern of life and work.
3. The most obvious changes are in the number and pattern of local authorities. At the same time the distribution of duties between local authorities has been rationalised. The National Health Service and the water services are also being reorganised (under different Acts of Parliament).
4. Local government in Greater London was reorganised in 1965 and the changes in areas and the distribution of responsibilities do not affect the local authorities which were established then; some of the other changes in the local government system do, however, apply in London. Local government in Scotland is being reorganised separately on 15 May 1975 and is not dealt with in this handbook.

AREAS AND FUNCTIONS

5. The basis of the new system of local government is that throughout England and Wales there will be two tiers of operational local authorities — county councils and district councils. Details of the responsibilities of these new authorities are in Part II. Part III contains a detailed description of their areas.

Metropolitan counties and districts

6. Six entirely new metropolitan counties have been established in England to provide services for the main conurbations outside London. These are: Tyne and Wear (including Sunderland as well as Tyneside), West Midlands (including Birmingham, the Black Country and Coventry), Merseyside, Greater Manchester, West Yorkshire, and South Yorkshire (these last four stretching in a broad urban band across northern England from the Wirral to Leeds and Doncaster).
7. These metropolitan counties have been divided into powerful metropolitan districts with populations, generally exceeding 250,000, large enough to support their own education services etc.

Non-metropolitan counties and districts

8. In addition to the six new metropolitan counties covering the conurbations, three new counties have been established where there is such large scale urban development spanning the traditional county boundaries that those boundaries no longer make sense. These are the county of Avon based on Bristol and Bath and the neighbouring areas of Gloucestershire and Somerset; Cleveland centred on the former county borough of Teesside, with Hartlepool and other parts of SE Durham and a small area of NE Yorkshire; and Humberside including Hull and much of the East Riding to the north, and Grimsby, Scunthorpe and adjoining areas of North Lincolnshire to the south, the two parts of which will be linked by the new Humber Bridge now under construction.
9. Apart from these three new counties the pattern of areas outside the conurbations has been based on the traditional counties. Some of the smallest counties have been amalgamated with others (eg Rutland and Leicestershire, Hereford and Worcester) and there have been some boundary adjustments (eg between Berkshire, Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire) where the pattern of county boundaries no longer conforms to the pattern of life and administrative needs. But, otherwise, the geographical counties have remained substantially as before. However, the 80 year-old administrative division between the counties and their biggest towns (the county boroughs) has been ended with the establishment of new counties covering the areas of both types of authority. Thus, for instance, the new county council of Nottinghamshire is now responsible for certain services in the City of Nottingham as well as in the surrounding county.

10. The pattern of districts in each non-metropolitan county has been based on the broad premise that a population of 60,000 to 100,000 is most appropriate for the administration of the services provided by non-metropolitan district councils. But some big towns above this figure will have been left as single entities while, at the other end of the scale, some districts with populations below 60,000 have been established where appropriate – mainly in areas of sparse population.

Welsh counties and districts

11. From 1 April 1974 Monmouthshire, which has been administered with Wales, formally became part of the Principality.

12. The Principality (including Monmouthshire) has been divided into eight counties: Gwynedd and Clwyd in the north, Powys in central Wales, Dyfed in the south west, and West Glamorgan, Mid Glamorgan, South Glamorgan (which includes Cardiff) and Gwent in the south. There are 37 new districts in Wales, many of those in the less well populated parts of the Principality reflecting the areas of the former Welsh counties. The responsibilities of the Welsh county and district councils are on the whole similar to those of the non-metropolitan county and district councils in England; a note about the differences is in Part II.

Local government functions

13. There has been no change in the overall scope of local government functions except those involved in the reorganisation of the National Health Service and the water services (see Parts VII and VIII).

14. Apart from these services, the existing duties of local government have been looked at as a whole for the first time since the major reforms of the last century, and allocated anew between the two new tiers of authorities. The main strategic services which need to be exercised over large areas (eg strategic planning and highways) are assigned to the new county councils, as are the police and the fire service. But the essentially local services concerned with community health and the protection of the environment – such as housing, refuse collection, most planning development control, dangerous structure notices etc – are put in the hands of the district council.

15. The services which need a substantial case-load but not necessarily a large area of territory have been allocated to the district councils in the conurbations (ie the metropolitan district councils most of which are responsible for populations of 250,000 or more) and the county councils elsewhere. The main services here are education, personal social services and libraries.

16. In addition to their statutory functions, all local authorities have a general power to spend up to the product of a rate of 2p a year on other matters for the benefit of their area or its inhabitants.

ORGANISATION OF THE NEW PRINCIPAL AUTHORITIES

Relationship between county and district

17. The basic aim of reorganisation is to provide for two tiers of local government each of which has its own duties and is independent of the other. Those duties are themselves, however, necessarily related, and it is an essential part of the new system that county and district councils will need to work together on related matters. To help make this easier the complex network of 'delegation' and 'claiming' arrangements under previous legislation has been repealed and replaced by a simple provision under which local authorities can agree between themselves for one to carry out functions on behalf of another where they find that convenient. The main field where agency arrangements of this type are likely to operate is in connection with highway matters, where the county needs to be the highway authority in order to keep an overall view of highway and transportation requirements (see paragraph 14 above), but where in urban areas much of the work on maintenance of highways, and to some extent improvement works, links up with duties of the district council and can often be more conveniently undertaken by the district acting as the agent of the county.

Internal organisation, names and titles

18. The new local authorities all come within the statutory description of county council or district council. A district may be granted borough status by royal charter, however; in that case the district will become a borough, the district council becomes a borough council, the chairman is styled the Mayor and the vice-chairman the Deputy Mayor. But this distinction is solely for ceremonial purposes; the duties of a borough council will be precisely the same as those of other district councils. Certain boroughs have been granted the status of city by The Queen, so that the borough council becomes the city council. In a small number of these cases the Mayor is entitled to the style of Lord Mayor.

19. Many of the features of the way in which local authorities work have been retained in the new system, although they may be subject to substantial modification. Thus the principle that all authority rests in the full council is retained, but in many cases the previous complex system by which the council did much of its detailed work through a multitude of committees and sub-committees is being replaced by a much smaller number of main committees dealing with broad areas of work. In many cases, too, much of the detailed day-to-day decision-making of the authority will be delegated to officers within the terms of general policies laid down by the council. In this way it should be possible for a great deal of current work to be carried out more rapidly than has sometimes been practicable in the past.

20. The structure of departments in most places (including London) shows a considerable change, with the appointment of a Chief Executive as the principal Chief Officer to whom the others are responsible, and the establishment of a management team with a view to unifying more effectively the work of the council staff as a whole.

21. As part of the changes some of the old titles of official posts will be disappearing, and the authority will need to nominate a 'proper officer' to sign documents and in other ways act on its behalf. The council may appoint different officers for different purposes, and it will be common to see formal notices, documents etc signed by, for example, 'Mr X, County Secretary, Proper Officer appointed for this purpose'.

22. The formal name of a local authority may be either 'the County (City, Borough, District) Council of', or 'the County (City, Borough, District) Council'. The words 'metropolitan' and 'non-metropolitan' are not formally part of the name.

23. Where it is desired to correspond with a local authority and the title of the particular official or department concerned is not known, correspondence may be addressed to the Chief Executive, or his equivalent, whose name and address appears in Part VI of this handbook. In serving a formal notice, order or document (but not writs or documents served in any proceedings in court) on a local authority or on the chairman or an officer of the authority, the correct procedure is to address it to the local authority and to leave it at, or send it by post to, the principal office of the authority or any other office which is specified by the authority as one at which a document of that description will be accepted.

Local authority finance

24. No major changes have been made in the system of local government finance, although various improvements have been made in the law. The rates continue to be the main independent source of local authority revenue; they are supplemented by the rate support grant from central government. Rates are collected by the district councils on their own behalf and on behalf of the county councils and parish or community councils for their areas. District councils may also collect water services charges on behalf of the new water authorities. In some areas arrangements have been made to ease the transition where areas which in the past have had widely differing rate poundages are now within the same new authority.

Allowances to members

25. New arrangements have been made for the payment of allowances to members of local authorities. The significant new item is that elected members may now claim an attendance allowance in lieu of the old financial loss allowance. The amount of this allowance is fixed by the authority within a limit laid down in regulations (at present £10 for a full day's attendance). The allowance is payable in respect of time spent on 'approved duties' which include attendance at council meetings, committees of the council, and meetings of certain other bodies to which councillors have been nominated by their authority. Parish and community councillors may claim an attendance allowance but only in respect of approved duties undertaken outside the area of the parish or community. The attendance allowance is payable irrespective of a councillor's means and without reference to the amount of wages etc lost, and is part of his taxable earned income. A local authority may also pay its Chairman, Mayor or Town Mayor an allowance to cover the expenses of his office.

Admission of the public to meetings

26. The new local authorities, like the old, are public bodies for the purposes of the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960, and the public and press must be admitted to council meetings unless the council at any meeting resolves to exclude them for some or all of the items on the agenda. The duty to admit the public and the press has now been extended to all committees and joint committees of local authorities (but not to sub-committees).

Complaints machinery — local government 'Ombudsman'

27. Under the Local Government Act 1974 Commissions for Local Administration are being established for England and Wales. The Local Commissioners will be able to investigate allegations of maladministration in local government where the cause of complaint arises after 1 April 1974. The authorities subject to investigation are, broadly, county councils, district councils, the Greater London Council, London borough councils, the City, the new water authorities, and any joint boards or committees of those authorities. Some of the activities of those authorities are, however, excluded from these arrangements, notably contractual and personnel matters.

PARISH AND COMMUNITY COUNCILS

28. The existing 10,000 parishes in England are in general not affected by the changes in local government, except that their powers (listed in Part II) have been somewhat extended. Some 300 new parishes – successor parishes – have been established in England for small towns similar in character to existing parishes which formerly had the status of boroughs or urban districts; in these cases the borough or urban district council (with its membership unchanged) has become a parish council with the same powers as other parish councils. In Wales parishes (as well as the former boroughs, including county boroughs, and urban districts) have been replaced by communities, which are constitutionally somewhat different. Further details about parish and community councils (including references to the procedure whereby a parish or community can become a town and a Town Mayor can be elected) are in Part IV.

ELECTIONS

29. The members of the new local authorities are all directly elected councillors; there are now no indirectly elected aldermen. In the case of the Greater London Council and the London borough councils the office of alderman will be phased out in the late 1970s. From 1 April 1974 the Chairman or Mayor of every local authority will be elected by the councillors annually from amongst themselves; it is no longer possible to elect someone to this office who is not already a member of the council. After a transitional period all councillors will be elected for four years, but the timing of the elections will vary with the authority. A full description of the new arrangements is in Part V.

THE REVIEW OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT AREAS

30. One weakness of the former system was that there was no provision for the regular review of areas and boundaries. Under the new system permanent Local Government Boundary Commissions for England and Wales have been set up to keep the areas and electoral arrangements of the new local authorities under review, so that the whole system does not get frozen into the form which has been adopted as appropriate in the 1970s. The current major priority tasks of the Commissions are, in England, the review of local government electoral arrangements, and, in Wales, the review of the pattern of communities.

THE LOCAL AUTHORITY ASSOCIATIONS

31. The new local authorities have set up new associations to represent them: the Association of County Councils (ACC), the Association of District Councils (ADC), and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities (AMA). Membership of the AMA is open to both metropolitan county and district councils, as well as to the London authorities, ie the GLC, the London borough councils and the Common Council of the City of London.

TRANSITIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

32. The transfer of staff and property to the new authorities has been made by order. The provisions made include provision for the transfer of liabilities (eg the servicing of loans) and of rights (eg the collection of arrears of rates). Where it is necessary for the actions of abolished authorities to remain valid after their abolition, this has been provided for. Thus, for example, any planning permission granted before 1 April 1974 continues in force until it expires in the normal way. Similarly the new authorities have taken over the responsibility for pursuing any action at law initiated by an abolished authority; a new authority will also have to answer to any action at law initiated against an abolished authority.

33. The new authority concerned in any particular case is generally the one responsible in that area for the local government function concerned. Where this cannot be readily identified, provision has been made for a 'residuary legatee authority' (in Wales a 'residuary authority') which, in the case of a former county council, is normally the council of the new county containing the largest part of the former county's population (or, in Wales, its area), and, in the case of a former county borough, borough, urban district or rural district council, is the council of the new district with the largest part of the former authority's population (or, in Wales, its area). A full list of these authorities is in Schedule 4 to the Local Authorities (England) (Property etc) Order 1973 (SI 1973 No. 1861) and the Local Authorities (Wales) (Property etc) Order 1973 (SI 1973 No. 1863), and in extensions to those orders (see Part X).

34. The staff of abolished local authorities were transferred to new authorities on 1 April 1974 except for those individuals who had been appointed to specific posts with a new authority before that date. The Local Government Act 1972 contains extensive provisions for the protection of the interests of the employees of local authorities during the reorganisation period and Local Government Staff Commissions for England and Wales have been appointed to advise on the application of those provisions. Similar provisions apply to the health and water services and separate Staff Commissions have been appointed under those provisions.

II. LOCAL AUTHORITY FUNCTIONS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

Introduction

1. Table II(a) contains a list of the major functions of principal authorities (ie county and district councils, London borough councils and the Greater London Council) in England. The principles on which the functions of the new authorities have been allocated are explained in paragraphs 13 to 16 of Part I above. With certain exceptions the responsibilities of the Greater London Council and the London borough councils are similar to those of metropolitan county and district councils. Similarly the responsibilities of Welsh county and district councils are, with some differences, the same as those of the non-metropolitan authorities in England; a note of those differences is on page 10.
2. Table II(a) does not purport to be fully comprehensive; it excludes numerous minor functions, including many powers which have been conferred on particular authorities by local Acts, and it also excludes those cases where an authority may have the right to be consulted or to make representations on a function which is another authority's responsibility. The table does, however, indicate the allocation to different authorities of different responsibilities in the same general field, and it also shows those powers which may be exercised by the council of either the district or the county.
3. Reference has been made in paragraph 17 of Part I to the powers that local authorities have to arrange for the discharge of functions by other authorities as agents. Such powers are available for all functions except those marked '(b)' in table II(a). The agency powers apply to parish and community councils who may act as agents for principal authorities and also arrange for a principal authority to act as their agent. In no case, however, may the financial responsibility for a function be made the subject of an agency arrangement.
4. In a few cases the responsibility for discharging a function may be vested in a joint board which acts in place of the local authorities for its area; examples of this occur in the public health field where joint boards exist acting as port health authorities, slaughterhouse authorities etc. A special type of joint board is the combined police authority — see table II(b).
5. Parish and community council functions (which have been increased in the course of local government reorganisation) are listed in table II(c). Part A of that table lists the services which parish and community councils may provide. These are all matters which could also be handled by the district council, except allotments in England which they may only provide where there is no parish council. Part B of table II(c) lists those functions of parish and community councils which are more 'representational' and generally speaking these powers are peculiar to those authorities.
6. Parish meetings in England (but not community meetings in Wales) may, in parishes which have no council, exercise certain powers; these are indicated in table II(c).
7. In addition to their statutory functions, all local authorities (including parish and community councils, but not parish meetings) have a general power to spend up to the product of a rate of 2p a year on other matters for the benefit of their area or its inhabitants.

Notes on Table II(a)

- a. In areas where there is a parish council that authority will be responsible.
- b. Agency arrangements not permissible.
- c. The councils of non-metropolitan districts and inner London boroughs whose areas serve primary schools are minor authorities for the purpose of appointing managers of these schools except in areas where there is a parish or community council (or, in England, a parish meeting) which can act as minor authority. Where the area serving the school comprises two or more of the authorities mentioned above they act jointly as a minor authority.
- d. Education is a borough function in outer London. In inner London education is provided by the Inner London Education Authority which is a special independent committee of the Greater London Council.
- e. County councils have certain reserve powers to provide housing subject to a request by a district council and/or the approval of the Secretary of State.
- f. The London boroughs are responsible for the provision of housing. The Greater London Council maintains a stock of housing which it inherited from the former London County Council and also has a strategic role (eg aiding the slum clearance programme of the inner London boroughs, provision of housing for Londoners outside London, re-housing GLC and London borough tenants whose accommodation needs change and providing accommodation through a nominations scheme for people on the borough waiting lists for housing).
- g. Most local authorities collect local licence duties through the agency of the Post Office.
- h. Some matters are reserved to the county councils but the district councils receive all planning applications initially.
- j. Two joint planning boards have been set up to administer national park functions in the Lake District National Park and the Peak National Park. For other national parks these functions are administered by a special committee of the county council mainly concerned which may include representatives of the other county councils and the district councils for the area of the national park.
- k. Greater London and certain areas immediately adjacent are policed by the Metropolitan Police force. This force is responsible directly to the Home Secretary.
- l. Rate demands issued by the district councils include precepts from county and parish councils; those issued by the London borough councils and the City of London include precepts from the Greater London Council.
- m. The function of licensing vehicles and drivers is now vested in the Secretary of State for the Environment. The issuing of licences is being centralised, but for the time being local authorities act as the Secretary of State's agents. For Greater London the local authority is the Greater London Council. Elsewhere, the agent authority may be either a county or district council. Arrangements for the issue of licences at Post Offices are unchanged; if it is necessary to write to the local authority it is sufficient to write to the address shown on the licence concerned.
- n. The Secretary of State for the Environment is highway authority for trunk roads.
- o. District councils may claim the right to maintain unclassified roads in urban areas (this power is distinct from the powers to act under agency agreements).
- p. The Greater London Council is highway authority for all principal roads in London other than trunk roads (ie the main strategic road network) while the London boroughs are highway authorities for non-principal roads.
- q. Highway lighting responsibilities in Greater London are divided on the same basis as highway responsibilities.
- r. Subject to the consent of the county council.
- s. Subject to the consent of the appropriate London borough council.
- t. On the application of the appropriate London borough council.

- u. The metropolitan county councils and the Greater London Council are the passenger transport authorities and there are passenger transport executives responsible for day to day administration.
- v. Non-metropolitan county councils are responsible for the co-ordination of public transport in their areas but in some cases district councils run transport undertakings.

THE ALLOCATION OF FUNCTIONS IN WALES

1. The division of functions between county, district and community councils in Wales is generally the same as that between non-metropolitan county and district councils and parish councils in England. The differences are:-

- i. Welsh district councils have refuse disposal functions (including the disposal of abandoned vehicles) as well as refuse collection functions; in England refuse disposal is a county council function;
 - ii. Welsh district councils are able to provide on-street and off-street car parks, subject to the consent of the county council; in England district councils may only provide off-street car parks;
 - iii. Welsh district councils may be designated exceptionally to exercise libraries, weights and measures and food and drugs authority functions; they may also be designated to exercise functions relating to cold and chemical storing of eggs, enforcement of statutory provisions relating to fertilisers and feeding stuffs and the enforcement of certain provisions made by or under the Medicines Act 1968;
 - iv. In Wales, Allotments Acts powers are exercisable concurrently by district and community councils; in England the parish councils and meetings are the allotments authorities.
2. The following authorities have been designated temporarily as library authorities:-

Cynon Valley District Council

Llanelli District Council

Merthyr Tydfil Borough Council

Rhondda Borough Council

No district councils have been designated to exercise the other functions listed at paragraph 1(iii) above.

Table II(b)

POLICE AUTHORITIES

All police forces in England and Wales, outside the area covered by the Metropolitan Police, apart from ten combined forces, will be based on a single county with the police authority constituted as a committee of the county council. The ten exceptions are:-

Avon and Somerset
Devon and Cornwall
Dyfed-Powys
Hampshire (including Isle of Wight)
Northumbria (combining Northumberland and Tyne and Wear)
North Wales (combining Clwyd and Gwynedd)

- B. Specific powers to receive notifications and represent parish interests to other authorities
1. District councils must notify parish councils in England and community councils in Wales of the following —
 - a. planning applications received by them where the parish or community council ask to be so notified;
 - b. intention to make byelaws relating to hackney-carriages, music and dancing, promenades, sea shore, registry of servants and street naming;
 - c. intention to provide a cemetery in a parish or community;
 - d. proposals to carry out sewerage works.

2. County councils must consult parish councils in England and community councils in Wales about footpath surveys.†
3. Parish councils in England and community councils in Wales may in certain circumstances withhold consent to proposals for stopping up unclassified highways and footpaths.
4. Parish councils in England and community councils in Wales are 'minor authorities' for the purpose of appointing managers of primary schools serving their area.†
5. Parish councils in England and community councils in Wales may often act as trustees or make appointments to the trustees of local charities.

* The exercise of these powers is subject to the consent of the county council.

† These powers or rights, as appropriate, are also available to parish meetings.

III AREAS OF THE NEW LOCAL AUTHORITIES

1. This Part contains the basic information on the new principal authorities established by or under the Local Government Act 1972.

2. There are two tables. Table III(a), which may be read with Map No 1, contains a definition of the districts in each new county by reference to former administrative areas, together with information on the status of the authorities, their area and population, and the number of members of each council. Table III(b) cross-refers each former local authority area to the new district and county in which it is located.

NOTES ON TABLE III(a)

The names of the new authorities are correct at the time of going to press (17 May 1974). County names were settled in the Local Government Act 1972; district names have been given by order. A principal authority may resolve to change its name but until 1 April 1978 any such resolution is subject to the consent of the Secretary of State. Where an authority has been given such consent before 17 May 1974, the new name is that first shown, the original name being shown in brackets.

* indicates that a district has been granted borough status.

"(City)" after a district name indicates a grant of city status (superseding any earlier grant of borough status).

 indicates a city whose mayor is entitled to the style of Lord Mayor. (In addition the Lord Mayors of Cardiff and York are entitled to the style of "Right Honourable".)

† indicates that in England a former borough or urban district or part of an urban district has been made a "successor parish" (see paragraph 3 of Part IV and table IV(a) which indicates the names of the successor parishes).

†† indicates that in Wales a former borough or urban district or part of an urban district has a Community Council.

References to wards in the second column are to wards of former authorities. Where a former administrative area is shown in the second column to be divided, a cross reference is made to the new districts containing the other parts of that area. Such new districts are in the same new county unless otherwise specified.

Where reference is made in the second column to a divided parish, see table IV(b) for information on the parts of that parish.

The population figures are based on the Registrar General's annual estimated figures for mid 1973.

The number of councillors shown for each authority was fixed by order before the first elections in 1973; it will be reviewed by the Local Government Boundary Commissions for England and Wales in the course of their reviews of local electoral arrangements generally.

IV. PARISHES, COMMUNITIES ETC

PARISHES IN ENGLAND

1. The existing 10,000 parishes in England have in general not been affected by the changes in the local government system, except insofar as there have been some extensions in the responsibilities and powers of parish councils (which are listed in Part II).

2. Some parishes have, however, been affected by boundary changes; a handful of authorities with special status continue to exist as parishes and a number of new parishes have been established. These are listed in the tables in this Part of the handbook.

(aa) 'Successor parishes'

3. Provision was made in the Act of 1972 for parishes to be established for small towns which are similar in character to existing parishes but which formerly had the status of borough or urban district. In these cases the members of the borough or urban district council have become the parish councillors and continue in office as parish councillors until the next parish council elections in 1976. Parish councils established in this way have all the powers of other parish councils. Some 300 'successor parishes' were established in this way; they are listed in table IV(a).

(bb) Parishes affected by boundary changes

4. Some existing parishes have been affected because the boundaries of new counties and districts have been drawn through their areas. The general rule is that the areas of parishes should not straddle such boundaries so in these cases new parishes have usually been established for each part of a parish divided by a new boundary. These cases are listed in table IV(b). In other cases the divided part of a former parish has been added to an existing parish. It will be noted that large areas of England (including the whole of Greater London and the areas of the former county boroughs and those former boroughs and urban districts which do not have successor parishes) are not in any parish for administrative purposes. Where it says in table IV(b) that an area 'ceases to be in any parish' it is treated for local government purposes like any other unparished area.

5. As a result of the creation of larger districts, two parishes with the same name may sometimes be found in the same new district. To avoid confusion, the names of some of these parishes, listed in table IV(c), have been altered.

(cc) Boroughs included in rural districts

6. The provisions of the Local Government Act 1958 provided a procedure for the review of local government areas which has now been superseded by the provisions of the Act of 1972. The 1958 Act provisions enabled small boroughs to be included in surrounding rural districts with broadly the rank of parishes; such boroughs, however, did not lose their corporate status but continued in existence as 'boroughs included in rural districts'. This special status was abolished on 1st April 1974 and the boroughs concerned have been reconstituted as parishes. They are listed in table IV(d).

(dd) Single parish rural districts

7. A handful of former rural districts contained only one parish and in those cases the law provided that the rural district council should also act as parish council. From 1st April 1974 the rural district has ceased to exist but the parish continues in existence and the members of the former rural district council continue to act as the parish council. These parishes are listed in table IV(e).

COMMUNITIES IN WALES

8. In Wales parishes have been replaced by communities. Unlike England, where many areas are not in any parish, communities are established for the whole of Wales. There are some constitutional differences between communities and parishes. In particular, although community meetings may be convened to discuss community affairs, they have no continuous existence in the way that parish meetings have in England, and there is no equivalent of the parish trustees. Matters which would in England be the responsibility of the parish meeting or the parish trustees are dealt with by the district council. However, where they exist, community councils have more or less the same range of responsibilities and powers as parish councils.

The general rule is that the areas of parishes should not straddle such boundaries so in these cases new parishes have usually been established for each part of a parish divided by a new boundary. It will be noted that large areas of England (including the whole of Greater London and the areas of the former county boroughs and those former boroughs and urban districts which do not have successor parishes) are not in any parish for administrative purposes. Where it says in table IV(b) that an area 'ceases to be in any parish' it is treated for local government purposes like any other unparished area.

5. As a result of the creation of larger districts, two parishes with the same name may sometimes be found in the same new district. To avoid confusion, the names of some of these parishes, listed in table IV(c), have been altered.

(c) Boroughs included in rural districts

6. The provisions of the Local Government Act 1958 provided a procedure for the review of local government areas which has now been superseded by the provisions of the Act of 1972. The 1958 Act provisions enabled small boroughs to be included in surrounding rural districts with broadly the rank of parishes; such boroughs, however, did not lose their corporate status but continued in existence as 'boroughs included in rural districts'. This special status was abolished on 1st April 1974 and the boroughs concerned have been reconstituted as parishes. They are listed in table IV(d).

(d) Single parish rural districts

7. A handful of former rural districts contained only one parish and in those cases the law provided that the rural district council should also act as parish council. From 1st April 1974 the rural district has ceased to exist but the parish continues in existence and the members of the former rural district council continue to act as the parish council. These parishes are listed in table IV(e).

COMMUNITIES IN WALES

8. In Wales parishes have been replaced by communities. Unlike England, where many areas are not in any parish, communities are established for the whole of Wales. There are some constitutional differences between communities and parishes. In particular, although community meetings may be convened to discuss community affairs, they have no continuous existence in the way that parish meetings have in England, and there is no equivalent of the parish trustees. Matters which would in England be the responsibility of the parish meeting or the parish trustees are dealt with by the district council. However, where they exist, community councils have more or less the same range of responsibilities and powers as parish councils.

10. The powers of communities in the first schedule to the Local Government (Wales) Commission for Wales. In the former communities less than designated to a Welsh parish and the latter, borough, borough and urban district which were comprised in a new district to have equal parity in the new district. The new towns through an urban district and to those where a community has been designated to a part of the district. These cases are listed in table IV(c).

11. Community councils may be established in the respect of the community mentioned above. Where the area of the community coincides with that of the district, the powers of the district community council shall be as provided in paragraph 5 above. Community councils have been established wherever there was a parish council and for those former boroughs and urban districts whose councils applied for the establishment of a community council. A list of the latter is in table IV(d).

12. Election of all the community councils which have been established took place on the 1st April, 1974.

TOWN AND CITY MAYORS

13. Both parish and community councils may resolve to adopt the status of town for their area. With the grant of borough status to a district the change does not affect the duties of the council, but it does change the title of the chairman to 'Town Mayor'. A small number of 'successor parishes' which succeed former local government areas with the status of cities, have been granted city status by the Queen. In these cases the chairman of the council becomes the 'City Mayor'.

CHARTER TRUSTEES

14. Provision has been made for the continuation of civic traditions in those places which were formerly boroughs and which are neither a district which have been granted borough status nor have a parish or community council with the power to adopt town status. For these areas special bodies called charter trustees have been constituted with the power to elect one of their members a Town or City Mayor. The members of the charter trustees are the district councillors representing the area of the former borough with which sections from that area appointed by the district council where the number of such councillors is less than three. Apart from the power to elect a Town or City Mayor, the charter trustees have no specific duties and provide no services. Their general function is to continue the civic traditions of the former borough and for this purpose they have the powers needed to make appointments to traditional offices of dignity and to look after the incidental property associated with those traditions including the charters, mayoral chains and other insignia, and civic plate of the former borough.

15. A list of cities and towns with charter trustees on 1st April 1974 is in table IV(b). The charter trustees cease to exist for any place when the district council is granted borough status or when the place is included in a parish, or in a community with a community council.

V. ELECTORAL ARRANGEMENTS

1. After a transitional period during the 1970s all councillors will be elected for a term of four years, but the ordinary election of county councillors and district councillors will take place in different years. All the new authorities were elected en bloc in 1973 and transitional arrangements have been made to prevent the councillors elected in 1973 having an unacceptably long or short term of office.

ENGLAND

County councils

2. Both metropolitan and non-metropolitan county councils will be elected en bloc in 1977 and every four years thereafter.

Metropolitan district councils

3. One-third of the councillors of each metropolitan district will be elected as from 1975 in each of the three years between county council elections (ie 1975, 1976; 1978, 1979, 1980; 1982, 1983, 1984; and so on). The wards in metropolitan districts all return three (or a multiple of three) members. At each election at least one district councillor will retire in each ward so that from 1975 all the electors in the district will have the opportunity of voting in a local government election every year, to elect either a district or county councillor.

Non-metropolitan district councils

4. Non-metropolitan district councils can choose whether to have elections by thirds like metropolitan district councils, or whole council elections like county councils. The whole council elections will take place in the year mid-way between the county council elections, in 1979, 1983, 1987 and so on. Where a district council has opted to have elections by thirds, one-third of its councillors will be elected in each of the years between county council elections.

5. Electoral areas need to be revised in nearly all the non-metropolitan districts. The next elections to these authorities will therefore all be held in 1976 on a whole council basis, and where authorities have chosen to have elections by thirds the new electoral timetable will come into operation after this. But in the non-metropolitan districts it may not be practicable — for reasons of geography and the distribution of population — to devise a convenient pattern of wards each of which returns three councillors. Wards may thus return one, two, three or even more members. So even when a non-metropolitan district council is elected on the basis of thirds, it will not necessarily follow that there will be an election in every ward in each election year.

Parish councils

6. When the system is fully in operation parish councils will be elected en bloc every four years; the election will be held at the same time as the election of a district councillor for the ward which includes the parish. The transitional period begins in 1976 when there will be elections to all parish councils including successor parish councils and irrespective of the year when the previous parish elections were held. Thereafter the normal years for parish elections will be 1979, 1983, 1987 and so on. These years will apply to parishes in non-metropolitan districts which have district council elections by thirds except where the whole of the parish is located in a district ward with only one or two members and no ordinary election of district councillors will be held in those years; in such a case the year of election of parish councillors will be adjusted to coincide with the district ward election.

WALES

County and district councils

7. The years of election for Welsh county councillors are the same as those for English county councillors (see paragraph 2 above). Welsh districts, like English non-metropolitan districts, may have whole council elections or elections by thirds, and their electoral cycle will be the same as that for their English counterparts (see paragraphs 4 and 5 above).

Community councils

8. Community councillors will be elected en bloc on the same basis as parish councillors in England, ie at the same time as a district council election and for a term of four years. First elections to all community councils took place on 7 February 1974 and the community councillors elected then will continue in office until 1979. Thereafter the normal years for elections will be 1983, 1987 and so on except where the district has elections by thirds and the whole of the community is located in a district ward with only one or two members and no district council elections are scheduled for those years; in such a case the year of election of community councillors will be adjusted to coincide with the district ward election.

GREATER LONDON

9. The Local Government Act 1972 provides for elections to local authorities in Greater London to be brought into line with the rest of England by order. Elections to the Greater London Council will take place in the same year as county council elections. Thus, following the GLC election in 1973, there will be elections in 1977 (when the office of alderman of the Greater London Council will cease to exist), 1981, 1985 and so on.

10. Whole council elections to the London borough councils took place on 2 May 1974. At that time it had been announced that the normal term of office for London borough councillors will be four years, but no final decision had then been taken on long-term electoral arrangements. It had, however, been announced that the office of alderman would cease to exist in the London boroughs at the time of the next ordinary elections after those held in 1974.

ELECTION DAY

11. All ordinary local elections of councillors due to be held in any year are normally to be held on the first Thursday in May.

SUMMARY

12. The complex arrangements described in this Part of this handbook are summarised in the attached table.

VI. CHIEF EXECUTIVES AND ADDRESSES OF PRINCIPAL AUTHORITIES

CONTENTS OF PART VI	Page
Metropolitan counties and districts	186
Non-metropolitan counties and districts	193
London	240
Wales	243

NOTES

1. The name of the officer shown is that of the head of each authority's permanent organisation.
2. The address shown is the address of the principal office of the authority within the meaning of section 231(1) of the Local Government Act 1972 (see paragraph 23 of Part I) wherever that has been determined.
3. Addresses are in the form adopted by the Post Office from 1 July 1974 (see below).

LOCAL GOVERNMENT REORGANISATION AND POSTAL ADDRESSES

The Post Office has announced that from 1st July 1974 the new county names become part of postal addresses in place of old county names and should be used as soon as possible, but that the old county names may still be used in addresses until 1st July 1975. This rule applies to addresses throughout England and Wales outside Greater London with the exception of Greater Manchester and Hereford and Worcester where addresses remain unchanged. In Humberside it is necessary to show whether an address is in North Humberside or South Humberside.

Addresses in certain post-towns have not, in the past, included a county name; these addresses are unchanged, but the postcode should be shown. Addresses in Greater London are also unchanged as are addresses in any place where the new county bears the same name as the former one. All postcodes are unchanged.

VII. NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE REORGANISATION

1. The purpose of the reorganisation effected by the National Health Service Reorganisation Act 1973 was to bring within one organisation all the various parts of the health service. Thus the functions of Regional Hospital Boards in England, the Welsh Hospital Board, Hospital Management Committees and the Boards of Governors of Teaching Hospitals – with the exception of some London Post Graduate Teaching Hospitals – (which ran the hospital service); the local NHS Executive Councils (which looked after the services provided by family practitioners, dentists, pharmacists and opticians), and the local health authorities (which provided a variety of community health services, eg the district nursing and health visitor services, the ambulance service, maternity and child health care, family planning etc) are, together with the school health service, now administered principally by an organisation of Area Health Authorities (AHAs) and Regional Health Authorities (RHAs) with a direct line of accountability to the Secretary of State for Social Services. In Wales there is no regional tier and AHAs are directly responsible to the Secretary of State for Wales.
2. The areas of the AHAs are the same as the areas of the local social services authorities (ie the non-metropolitan and Welsh counties and the metropolitan districts), except that in London each AHA covers between 1 and 3 London boroughs. The RHAs each cover a group of AHAs; at least one University medical school is included in each region. The detailed geographical arrangements are shown on Map Number 2.
3. The RHAs are responsible for strategic planning and monitoring, allocation of resources and managing a small number of services. AHAs will plan and have responsibility for operating most services and for collaboration with local government.
4. An AHA may be divided into one or more health districts (not necessarily with the same boundaries as local government districts). In each Area there is a Family Practitioner Committee which, in accordance with regulations, administers on behalf of the AHA arrangements for the provision of Family Practitioner Services (general medical, dental, ophthalmic and pharmaceutical services). Districts will be the basic management unit for planning and operating most services so that operational control is kept as close as possible to the point of direct patient care.
5. Close collaboration is required between AHAs and local authorities particularly in the areas of the school health service (which the AHAs will be providing for local education authorities), the social services (local social services authorities are now responsible for the hospital social work service as well as for the back up social care that a family may need while a parent is ill and at other times) and the environmental health services (which are the responsibility of the new district councils). This collaboration is made easier by the general use of the same boundaries for AHAs and local social services authorities. Each Area Health Authority includes, in addition to the Chairman appointed by the Secretary of State for Social Services, members appointed by the Regional Health Authority and some members appointed by the corresponding non-metropolitan county, metropolitan district or London borough council or councils; where appropriate members are also appointed by the Inner London Education Authority and the City of London. In Wales the Secretary of State for Wales appoints the Chairman and part of the membership. In addition Joint Consultative Committees are being established by each AHA and its associated local authority or authorities (ie the councils of the counties, districts, London boroughs or the City of London which are wholly or partly in the area of the AHA) to co-ordinate their interrelated activities.
6. The RHAs are required to establish 'community health councils' principally to represent the local community's interest in the health services to those responsible for managing them. In Wales this function devolves on the Secretary of State. Generally one such council is being established for each health district with at least half its membership (total approximately 18-30) appointed by the appropriate local authorities for the area, at least one third by voluntary organisations and the rest by the RHA, or in Wales by the Secretary of State. AHAs are required to provide councils with such information about the planning and operation of health services in the Area as they may reasonably require; and to consult the CHC on any proposal which the AHA may have under consideration for any substantial development or variation of the health service in the CHC's district. CHCs have the right to enter and inspect hospitals and other health premises controlled by the AHA. CHCs are required to make annually a formal report to the establishing RHA on their activities, or in Wales to the Secretary of State, to send a copy to the relevant AHA and to publish it. The AHA is required to comment on these reports, to include a record of any steps taken on issues raised in them and to publish the comments.
7. Health Service Commissioners for England and Wales have been appointed (both offices are filled by Sir Alan Marre who is also Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration). The Commissioner is able to investigate complaints of injustices or hardship as a result of failure in, and a failure to provide, health authority services or of maladministration involved in other actions taken by health authorities, (but not complaints which relate to the exercise of clinical judgement by doctors and other staff nor complaints for which statutory procedures already exist). He will investigate complaints made within 12 months from the day the aggrieved person first had notice of the matters alleged in the complaint, but he will normally only undertake an investigation when he is satisfied that the health authority concerned has had a reasonable opportunity to deal with the complaint.

8. A list of addresses of RHA and AHA headquarters is given in the following tables.

VIII. WATER REORGANISATION

1. The Water Act 1973 establishes a new organisation for the administration of Water Services in England and Wales. It establishes nine new regional water authorities and the Welsh National Water Development Authority, with areas based primarily on river catchment areas (see map No. 3); table VIII(a) describes their areas in terms of former river authority areas. A majority of the members of a water authority are appointed by the local authorities and the remainder by the Secretary of State for the Environment (who also appoints the Chairman), and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. In the Welsh National Water Development Authority the Chairman is appointed by the Secretary of State for Wales, and the appointed members by the Secretary of State for Wales and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food acting jointly.
2. The water authorities took over from 1 April 1974 the functions of the former river authorities (including the Thames and Lee Conservancies and the Isle of Wight River and Water Authority), all statutory water undertakers (except the statutory water companies, and joint water boards and committees constituted under section 9 of the Water Act 1945 and on which a statutory water company is represented), all joint sewerage boards, and the sewerage and sewage disposal functions of local authorities. They will, thus, be responsible for water supply and conservation, river pollution control and river management, sewerage and sewage disposal, fisheries and land drainage. In addition, the water authorities will discharge a new duty to develop the use of their water space for recreation and amenity purposes. Water authorities are expected to make agreements with the new district councils whereby the latter should discharge the sewerage function on an agency basis. The water companies (other than those in public ownership) which continue in existence will supply water for their areas on behalf of the water authorities.
3. The Welsh National Water Development Authority discharges the functions of a regional water authority for all river basins lying wholly within Wales and for the Dee and Wye river basins. There are special arrangements for that part of Wales which lies within the area of the Severn-Trent Water Authority. The Welsh authority will also have the additional responsibility of drawing up a plan for the development of water-based recreation throughout the whole of Wales.
4. The water authorities are multi-purpose executive bodies. The responsibility to promote a national water policy for England and Wales lies with the Secretaries of State for the Environment and Wales and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The National Water Council, which includes the chairmen of the water authorities and 10 other appointed members, will advise Ministers on national water policy, and provide water authorities with a forum for the discussion of common problems and for the formation of a united view on matters of common interest to them, for the development and dissemination of uniform policy and practices, and for the provision of common services.
5. All services provided by water authorities, except for land drainage, will be financed by charges levied directly on consumers. For an initial period of two or three years, however, charges for sewerage and some other services will be collected on behalf of the water authorities by district councils and all ratepayers will be liable to pay them. It is not expected that there will be any radical changes in the immediate future in present methods of charging for water services.
6. The names and addresses of the Director General of the National Water Council and the Chief Executives of the new water authorities are at table VIII(b).
